British MoD UFO Admission

Dear Editor: I'm happy to tell NEXUS readers that, contrary to what was said in a recent article about UFOs (NEXUS April-May '96, vol. 3/03), I have not resigned from the Ministry of Defence. What actually happened was this: from 1991 to 1994 I investigated UFO sightings for the British Government, and handled policy on this fascinating subject. My brief was to evaluate the phenomenon, looking for any evidence of a threat to the defence of the United Kingdom. I started my tour of duty as a sceptic, but became convinced that a small percentage of UFOs were indeed extraterrestrial in origin.

In 1994 I was promoted and moved to other duties within the Department. But I felt that the UFO phenomenon was often being ignored by my colleagues because of personal prejudices stemming from the phrase "UFO", and decided to write a book to set the record straight. Open Skies, Closed Minds, which is to be published by Simon & Schuster in June, was not popular in certain quarters, not least because it exposes unauthorised penetrations of heavily defended airspace by structured craft of unknown origin, whose technology is considerably in advance of our own.

Be that as it may, I am still working at the Ministry of Defence—although I think it's safe to say that I'm off the Christmas card list!

Yours sincerely, Nick Pope,
London, England, UK.

Conspiracy Confusion

Dear Duncan: Being a regular reader of NEXUS Magazine, I consider myself more informed than the average Joe Blow when it comes to conspiracy theories of all varieties. The one that leaps to mind over the stupid, awful events at Port Arthur is the one about disarming the masses so they are unable to defend themselves against the evil NWO—this being accomplished by wiring some poor stooge and instructing him to do a stupid, awful thing so that the masses disarm themselves, or giving the stooge mind-altering psychiatric drugs to accomplish the same end.

I started thinking on this. What would happen if surfer boy came out and told the world that he was wired and instructed to do this stupid, awful thing, or that the drugs made him do it? People would naturally wonder where he got such a ridiculous idea. The answer? Magazines like NEXUS, of course. These publications would then be in some 'deep doo-doo' for providing a simple, impressionable and mentally unstable young lad with an excuse to play out his wildest fantasies.

Here is where this line of thinking gets interesting. The public would naturally call for magazines like NEXUS to tone it down or get banned. This would happen whether or not the conspiracy thing was a reality. The end result? NEXUS would be gone and we still wouldn't have any proof one way or the other—just as semi-automatic weapons will soon be gone and we won't know whether this is because of the evil NWO or benign NSE (natural social evolution).

My own feeling is that semi-automatic weapons are not conducive to the dawning of a spiritually-aware new age. Further, I believe in taking the middle road when chaos lies to the left and the right.

Finally, I will state an observation. Inflexible (dare I say it, fanatical) people and organisations inevitably wind up painting themselves into a corner. I suppose what I'm saying is try not to let this happen to our beloved NEXUS.

Yours sincerely, Peter H.,
Queensland, Australia.

Mind Machines Minefield

Sirs/Madams: Wow! I am in the midst of perusing your magazine for the first time. Like I said, wow! I love it!

What I am wondering is how can I know which of the hypno-peripheral/acoustic-processing/state-altering/life-enriching/ability-activating mind machines is the one to go with?

Sincerely yours, Colin T., East Perth, Western Australia.

(Dear Colin: The best mind-machine is still your own! Ed.)

Electronic Persecution

Dear Mr Roads: I am doing something I have wanted to do for some time now: write to you. I have been a reader of NEXUS Magazine since its inception and look forward to each new issue reaching the booksellers here in Palmerston North, New Zealand. I see NEXUS being increasingly stocked by various retailers around the city, which is worthy praise for such a quality production as yours.

NEXUS has been a constant source of knowledge/linkage/hope for me as I grapple with my personal experiences. The well-researched and presented articles on military malice and corporate greed, such as the one on HAARP and other such features on those who utilise advanced technological devices and methods to modify and manipulate environments, regions, groups and individuals, truly merit our gratitude.

I, for one, urge you and your staff to maintain the path you are on and the principles you demonstrate, as experience has taught me there are still too few systematic avenues available in print for people such as those whose voices are heard in your magazine. Sadly, for those who like silence or prefer to 'duck their heads in the sand', too many avenues prevail for them to do so with impunity.

Here in provincial Palmerston North I do not go to town much these days; instead, I remain close to home. However, yesterday I was in town attending to a few things. It was raining buckets as I headed back to my car. I had just switched on the ignition when it flashed through my mind to run across to the bookshop to see if your April-May issue had arrived. If you have ever read The Celestine Prophecy, then this was one of those coincidences the book speaks of!

I couldn't see NEXUS in the shop, so in consolation I picked up the latest Time magazine (which screamed a headline on the human brain as a machine...they wish!). Then, as I was about to pay, the assistant confirmed that NEXUS had just arrived. I stuck Time back on the shelf and obtained my rightful magazine. Once home, I tore off the brown-paper bag and scanned the cover: "Deadly Earth Rays" and "Ultra-tech Spying". I turned to the latter and began to read about the NSA and what they do to people. [See NEXUS 3/03.]

I read and re-read in horror and disgust, taking in the incredible yet totally believable content. Here it was: the truth, the cruel reality, the fearsome, invisible weaponry of those whose mandate it is to harass, manipulate, maim and suppress, all in the name of 'security' today.

Put simply, I wish you and your readers to know that, like Mr John St Clair Akwei, I have been a target for continuous electronic persecution for what feels like a lifetime (16 months now, I think). The horrible facts you carefully articulate, of remote neural monitoring coupled with technological interference directly into the brain, began for me (as far as I am able to register consciously) in early October 1994 and have continued unabated into the present. In having to endure this, I am alone, terrorised, disempowered and hold little hope of fighting back. Thus I felt the tears form when I read of Mr Akwei because I know in detail how wretchedly he must have suffered while living within a supposed liberal democracy. Strange, though: as I read about his pending court action against his tormentors, hope was rekindled that something, just something, might be done.

Please keep your information link on the subject of modern electronic persecution and about Mr Akwei alive and flowing for others like me. Then maybe we can begin to turn the tide in favour of justice, against those who would secretly and surreptitiously smile as they kill.

Yours sincerely, Janine J.,
Palmerston North, New Zealand.

Doped Up and Defenceless?

Dear Editor: There is something very wrong and fearful about a government that is seriously considering legalising heroin whilst at the same time doing everything possible to prohibit private ownership of firearms.

The sick, pathetic excuse they use to cover up a government pushing drugs is called "a harm minimisation model". The dogooders and government flunkies chant, "People don't rob people, heroin robs people!", or "If heroin was not illegal, it would not kill!" Sound familiar? Both these arguments are the opposite to what is claimed by the anti-gunners. Both camps claim to be able to create a peaceful, loving society.

They want to turn this society into a defenceless mob of doped-up zombies. Just like sheep to the slaughter.

Yours faithfully, Michael K.,
Richmond, NSW, Australia.

Truth vs Propaganda

Dear Duncan: I think your magazine is great. You're doing a great service to mankind by getting this information out. How does your ego feel now?!

Seriously, it's great info. I've got a binder full of articles divided into categories. I fax here, send there. Hopefully, my efforts will enlighten others—then we'll all benefit.

You have stated before that you

... more Letters to the Editor

NB: Please keep letters to approx. 100-150 words in length. Ed.

have enough articles to publish once a month, but to do so would be a big step.

Then, if you only publish bi-monthly, why put in "An ET Perspective on Earth"? [NEXUS 3/04] It's totally untrue. I know. I'm from Omicron Ceti III. We're at war with the Andromedans, and the article is pure propaganda. Get the idea? Anyone with an imagination could write this. Please don't publish Part 2. You publish only bi-monthly; there must be better articles. Six pages x number of magazines = too many trees wasted.

Also, the article, "New Revelations on the Roswell UFO Crash": "A Friend" wants anonymity but gives so many details about himself that the NSA could figure who he is in less than two seconds: "My grandfather was a member of the crash retrieval team...died in 1974"; "I am passing through S.C. with an ORME...mail from the Charleston area"; "Neil Armstrong, a good friend of mine"—truth or crap?

Other than these oversights, keep up the fantastic work. You inspire others!

Paul S., Ajax, Ontario, Canada.

(Dear Paul: You are massively outvoted on the Alex Collier story, but your comments regarding the Roswell crash debris items are similar to my own. Ed.)

Ozone vs Chlorine

Sir: Chlorine, which is known a deadly gas and has been used in war to kill people, is being put into our water supplies here in the Colac area—which is unacceptable, unhealthy and plain stupidity. Chlorine causes side-effects and spins off trihalomethanes or chloroform which can inhibit certain bodily functions.

A healthy human body is around four-fifths water. Water is eight-ninths oxygen. So it is important what quality of water people drink. If you bathe in a liquid for 15 minutes, your body, through the pores, picks up as much of the liquid as if you would drink two litres of it. Chlorine should not be in our water, and I advocate that we take it out and then use a safe and natural alternative in ozone (O<sub>3</sub>), which is a highly effective water purifier.

Moreover, what is in water that should not be there, ozone will eliminate.

Some international swimmers will not compete (swim) in a swimming pool that has chlorine in it because they know that they can achieve better and faster times in a swimming pool treated with ozone. Ozone units can be fitted to homes, showers, baths and pools to purify water and to remove contaminants.

Pure ozone can also be used for medical purposes, too; keeping in mind, balanced amounts (therapeutic window). Dr Otto Warburg, who won the Nobel Prize in Medicine twice (1931 and 1944) discovered that cancer cannot grow in a high-oxygen environment. Also, Dr Warburg said that if you deprive a cell 60 per cent of its oxygen, it will turn cancerous.

Let us thank the Divine Creator for giving us oxygen.

Patrick K., Colac, Victoria, Australia (first published in The Colac Herald).

Free Nation, Free Energy?

Dear Duncan and NEXUS: First, the Waco massacre prompts lawmakers to ban assault weapons in the United States. Next, the Oklahoma bombing 'happens' and anti-terrorism legislature is rushed through Congress, fittingly on the anniversary of this unprecedented tragedy.

Being the trendsetters that we Americans are, another unstable, mind-raped individual is pushed to the breaking point in yet another allegedly democratic nation—this time, plaguing the fair shores of your beloved Australia. An assault weapons ban and registration of weapons under the public ownership is quickly on the heels of the worst singular mass murder in the country's history.

Surely these are merely coincidences and I'm letting my imagination drift into paranoia? What could any government possibly hope to gain by having a defenceless populace or by keeping strict records on the owners of weapons in a free nation?

Keep up the great work on informing folks about free-energy devices. With hundreds, perhaps thousands of innovative experimenters working in labs and garages around the world, this truth can't be suppressed for much longer. Thank you.

Kory K., Los Angeles, California, USA.

Cancer Cures & Conspiracies

Dear NEXUS: Excellent magazine! I bought one, then was forced to buy a large amount of back issues. Now I'm threatening to subscribe! Many of your reports are to do with amazing cancer cures and conspiracies, new HIV research, and, my favourite, urine therapy. These are very, very interesting.

I would like to know more about urine therapy and the validity of the claims before I become a gullible sucker who drinks his own urine because of someone's twisted, imaginative sense of humour.

Also, if there are any researchers in England currently working in these fields who are reading this letter, could you drop me a line as I am seriously interested and will also pay for papers if needed!

If these therapies are so good, why aren't they used more? And if they are suppressed, why?

Being brought up in a shopkeeping family, I was brought up to be honest. I fail to see how therapies such as these could be held back, especially if they claim to save the lives they say they do. Most doctors train because they care and want to help people, so why hold back stuff that saves lives? I can understand bosses of big drug companies as they are fuelled by greed, and I can understand UFO silence by governments (just!). But this surely should be different!

Sorry to go on, but if it wasn't for people like you and your magazine, the world would be full of wrongly-taught puppets. Keep up the excellent work!

Yours sincerely,

Andy Leeman, 16 Lansdall Ave, Lea nr Gainsboro, Lincolnshire, DN21 5JL, England, UK.

(Dear Andy: So many questions, so few answers. There are a growing number of 'open-minded' doctors, however. Maybe you should talk to one of them. Ed.)

Strange Moments in Time

Dear Duncan: Please, please, somebody give me a clue as to what is happening to me. A while back, a few years ago whilst living in the Blue Mountains, one night I saw a 'pillow of light' rise from my lawn up past my window and over the roof. As I ran to see what it was, it was gone. During my time in this house, my home in the Blue Mountains, strange things were happening. All in all, it made me feel safer—almost invincible. I was very happy there.

One night I awoke hearing and feeling something running around my bed. My clock-radio was showing 12.24 am, and as I was trying to take a better look at a small, dark silhouette, it disappeared. I got out of bed, checked around the house, checked on the kids (my husband was on night shift as usual). After what seemed like 10 minutes I returned to bed to see that it was still 12.24 am. Feeling a little annoyed, as I rarely fall asleep as quickly after being woken, I watched the clock to see if it was working, and before the time changed I was asleep. The next morning I talked to my family about it who dismissed it as just a dream.

A week or so later I was woken up again by someone's house alarm. Upon rising out of the bed, it was 12.24 am. I walked towards my window, looked out and heard the alarm quite clearly but could not tell from where it was coming. I walked around the house, checked on the kids, and decided to get dressed, get a torch and go up the driveway with the dog to see whence the alarm was coming. As I stood there all alone in the night, there was no alarm to be heard. I shuddered at the thought of being silly enough to be there alone. Once back inside, I locked up and decided to go back to bed. It was still 12.24 am. It felt much longer but, feeling a touch annoyed, I was asleep before the time changed.

Next morning I was euphoric, feeling that this is something very strange. I tried to get information regarding this matter, but to no avail. Everyone thought I was just dreaming. I know that I wasn't.

Since then, a lot has happened but I cannot understand it all. I would very much like some enlightenment from persons who may have had similar experiences or from people who may know what this is all about and where it may lead. I want answers and I will not rest until I find them.

I started to read NEXUS—found it by accident on the newsagents' shelves about eight months ago. It is a wonderfully explorative publication which I give to my friends to read as a gift. I wish to conclude this letter by saying, "Excellent stuff!"; keep up the good work, and make it monthly as I cannot stand the long wait between publications.

Regards, Alis J., Blackmans Bay, Tasmania, Australia.

(Dear Alis: There are many people who contact us with similar stories. All feel there is no one and nowhere to go to, to seek an understanding of what is going on. Maybe one day this will all change. Ed.)
